Winter 2016

Message from Craig

December is a complicated time of year sometimes evoking mixed emotions. The joy and spirit of the holiday season, can mingle with twinges of sadness for the recently departed. The excitement of a new year filled with great possibilities, sits alongside our reflecting upon another year gone by, and, the inevitable reality of being a year older.

This conflicting feeling stems from human nature. None of us live in a world of either this, or that. We all live in a world of both this, and that.

Like in any presidential election year, change ripples across the nation, our communities and even college campuses. And Penn is in many ways a microcosm of our whole global society; where a stroll along Locust Walk puts a lot of both this and that on full display. As an institution dedicated to teaching, research and service, such pluralism needs our support.

As we enter 2017 it is unknown what challenges we face, only that we will face them. And when these challenges do arise, I encourage all of us to adopt the mindset of both this, and that.

As people we react emotionally to situations, and while it may not feel natural, it is important that all of us at Penn - a tremendous community serving society in ways too numerous to count - continue to serve both researchers and patients; both scholars and students. And as an extension of being the largest private workforce in the city, acknowledge that how we operate serves both the citizens and economy of our region.

And it is in that spirit that I thank each and everyone one of you for both your service and dedication to Penn. As we prepare for 2017, I know we can all keep both feet on the ground, see the best of both worlds, and when required burn the candles at both ends.

As always, you have both my gratitude and respect as the finest colleagues imaginable. My personal best wishes to you and your families for a wonderful holiday season and a restful Winter Break.

Best,

Craig
